Theory of Multiple Intelligence

- The Theory of Multiple Intelligence was proposed by Harvard Psychologist, Howard Gardner.
- He suggested that all the people in the world have a variety of intelligences.
- The different kinds of intelligences are intellectual, musical, interpersonal, spatial- visual and linguistic.

Summary

This lesson mainly deals with the different kinds of intelligences that each human being possesses. Each individual is skilled or good at doing something. Some people are efficient in creating mental images, some use words and language really well, some can think logically, some can skilfully control their body movements, some enjoy music while some are great at understanding others. People across the world succeed in not just one but varied professions because they have multiple intelligences.
